

Give the gift of hearing this Valentine's Day!

Valentine's Day is coming and love is in the air! It's that time of the year where you show your significant other how much they mean to you by giving them flowers and chocolates or planning a nice dinner. While these are all nice gestures, make sure to also focus on the day's true meaning: reconnecting with your significant other. If you or your partner has untreated hearing loss, the two of you may not be able to communicate like you did in the past. If hearing loss has weakened your emotional connection, carving out time to strengthen your communication skills is especially crucial.

Ask any happy couple what are the secrets to a successful relationship, and chances are that "communication" will be on the list. That's because communication allows both partners to convey their thoughts and emotions to each other – a very important aspect of a healthy relationship. Take away this ability to talk, hear, and respond and the relationship can be strained.

Oftentimes, hearing loss occurs so gradually that many people don't realize they have a problem. If you are finding that people always have to repeat themselves to you or your partner, or they don't understand why the radio or TV is so loud, it won't hurt to get a hearing screening. Many people don't realize the effects that hearing loss has on those close to the person impaired, and the impact that it has on their relationship.

Valentine's Day is the perfect time to show your significant other that your love is still as strong as the day you fell in love. Show them you care by giving the gift that will last well beyond February and have their hearing tested by an Audiologist!
